Filter inappropriate words when surfing the Internet. If you are surfing the Internet with an Internet Explorer 6, 7, 8 or 9 and want to protect your children, or you are surfing at home with your parents and want to protect them from the naughty words on the Internet, this is the right software for you. KEYMACRO has been designed in such a way that it can be used on any version of Internet Explorer. It will automatically scan the content of your Internet Explorer, regardless of the version. For example, you may be surfing at home with your parents and want to protect them from the naughty words on the Internet, or you may be surfing at school, and want to protect your children from the word that you type on the Internet. This is a good protection method. KEYMACRO filters inappropriate words by identifying these words in such a way that they will be automatically blocked in your Internet Explorer. This way, the censorship will be done automatically, just like it was done before. When you click on the words you want to be blocked, they will be automatically blocked. This way, you will never have to think about the words you want to censor. KeyMACRO also allows you to filter a specific word in your Internet Explorer. This way, when you type a word in Internet Explorer, KeyMACRO will scan the web pages that are displayed and identify the word. If the word is inappropriate for your context, the word will be automatically blocked. However, if it is allowed, it will be displayed on the web pages that you are looking at. The words that are automatically blocked will always be displayed, while the ones that are not automatically blocked will be displayed only when you type them. This is a very good software, because if you are surfing with your parents, this software will make sure that the words they want to censor do not appear on the web pages you are browsing. On the other hand, if you are surfing at home, the software will do the same with the words that you type at home. So, with this software, you will never have to think about the words that you want to censor, and that will protect your children and you from the naughty words on the Internet. You can filter the words in a list or in a window. You can also filter the words in a specific web page. KeyMACRO can filter specific words in the URL, search terms, address bar and text area. Q: Is it possible to create a "safe" alternative to Angular's $scope? I have a quite complex Angular 2 application that integrates many 3rd-party libraries. Those libraries are not under my control and often provide their own implementation of services to be used by the application. Right now, I manage that in the following way: I create a Service that provides the dependencies needed by my application. When a service is instantiated, I extract the dependencies from the 3rd-party libraries I set the dependencies on the service. This works but it feels hacky. I'd like to have an easier way to integrate the dependencies that solves my problem, but in an idiomatic way. The only way that comes to my mind is to use a global injector (DI) to resolve the dependencies. But in that case, the applications need to register their services with that global injector which feels not idiomatic. Are there alternative solutions?

A: I found a solution to my problem that is pretty close to what I want. I defined a custom angular service called factory that has the same behavior of a factory in AngularJS. That way, I
